Shepherd's Bluff

The woods on Shepherd's Bluff (Pastýřská stěna) hold several surprises. You can enjoy a walk on a sandstone ridge right in the heart of town, take in the zoo, and have a meal at the terrace viewpoint. Start your trip at the riverbank or on the bluff itself. If you drive up to the zoo parking lot, you can walk up the road to the clifftop restaurant. Or take the long way, following the red trail from the riverside up a stone-paved path to the top of the cliff. There's an enchanting view of the river, the castle, and the town.

Continue on the red trail along the ridge and enjoy the views along the way. The trail takes you to an outcropping with a nice view. At this spot, the path forks; the red trail leads 9 km to Sněžník and the unmarked path goes through the woods and cliffs around a glade with a playground, and back to the zoo. From this point you can either return to the restaurant and descend to the riverside, take another trail along the sandstone bluff and enjoy the view of the river and the castle, or walk down the access road to Teplická ulice. The whole trip is and easy 3 km walk with plenty of spots to rest and is suitable for families with children.

Děčín is an ideal spot for anyone who enjoys hiking, romantic walks, or daytripping with the family. There is a trail here for everyone. The city itself has two wooded parks that are perfect for short walks and can serve as a starting point for longer hikes into Bohemian Switzerland National Park or to Děčínský Sněžník.

The Tisá Cliffs

The Tisá cliffs are a veritable fairyland. This fantastic landscape lies at the edge of the Elbe sandstones area. The "cliff city," as the spot is known locally, will surprise you with rock formations in the shapes of animals, human figures, and faces. Well marked trails covered with fine sand trace the line between earth and sky. The cliffs at Tisá are one of the region's longest standing tourist attractions. The site is made up of two parts, each with its own sightseeing trail but with a joint educational trail (look for the white square with the green diagonal stripe) that has seven stations. A red trail runs along the top of the velké stěny (great cliffs) and is the shortest route between the entrance and the cabin at the other end. The formations are numbered and marked with a white square. The malé stěny (lesser cliffs) have 19 formations while the velké stěny have 56. Enter the area from the village of Tisá. There is parking across from St. Ann's Church. Treat yourself to a pub meal in the village after your hike. The cliffs are open year round. This trip is suitable for families with children.

Cost of entry: Adults 30 CZK, children 15 and under 15 CZK

Quaderberg Trail

The hike on Quaderberg starts with the red trail at the upper end of the park near the city hospital. The path zigzags up the slope, among the beech trees, to the observation terrace at the top. Take in the sweeping view over the rooftops of Děčín but don't get too comfortable here - this is only the first great view in store for you. Continue on the red trail along the sandstone ridge over the Elbe valley. After about one kilometer, the path comes to another observation point, Labská stráž. This romantic stone pavilion offers a nice view of the Elbe cutting its way among the sheer sandstone bluffs. The trail heads slightly to the right now, away from the Elbe canyon. At this point you can choose to return to the park or continue. The shortest route is roughly 3 km long. If you decide to forge on, it will be a 12 km walk with great views of the dramatic Elbe valley, the largest sandstone canyon in Europe. Head towards Loubí Brook to rejoin the ridge running towards Růžový hřeben. After a memorable look at Růžový hřeben you can retrace your footsteps on the red trail or take the green trail from the Nad Loubím crossroads along the gully to Loubí. The green trail is a pleasant walk among the cliffs ending, like the red trail, back in Děčín; the only difference being that the green trail ends at the bottom of the park by the playground. Avid hikers can follow the red trail all the way to Hřensko. On the way, the route passes the Belveder observation terrace, where you can get a bite to eat. The trip from Děčín to Hřensko is 17 km.
